

Monday deadline for EU to back Canada deal

EU trade negotiators are rushing to assuage the Walloon govt's concerns before the Monday deadline set by Canadian PM to decide whether to fly to Brussels backing from its five sub-federal administrations.

French-speaking Wallonia has steadfastly opposed it, saying the deal is bad for Europe's farmers and gives too much power to global corporate interests.

Walloon premier Paul Magnette has said the summit should be delayed to allow more time to deliberate.

In a last ditch bid to secure Walloon backing, EU trade officials are offering to tweak a political declaration appended to the treaty, an EU source said.

A source with the European Commission, which is apparently keen to avoid issuing a deadline that could irk Walloon leaders, said the EU executive "understands that Belgium needs a bit of time". Many EU leaders suspect the local government in Namur is using its devolved powers to play domestic politics. "This is first of all an inner-Belgian matter," an EU source said. Walloon Socialist leader Elio Di Rupo, one of the most vocal opponents of the deal, cast doubt a deal could be reached next week.

"They took years to negotiate #CETA and we are refused a few weeks," Di Rupo, a former Belgian prime minister, tweeted on Sunday. "Will we reach a solution? All depends on the contents. If it doesn't change enough, we will maintain our opposition."

European Council President Donald Tusk, who chairs the collective body of the EU's leaders, will speak to Belgian PM Charles Michel by late on Monday, EU sources said, before informing Trudeau's government of the state of play. Reuters

Iraq to maintain oil output while OPEC partners discuss cuts

Baghdad, Oct 23: Iraq will maintain oil production at current levels after exceeding 4.7 million barrels a day in September, even as other OPEC members discuss limits on output.

Iraq asked the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries for an exemption from its participation in any cuts, Oil Minister Jabbar Al-Luaibi said Sunday at a news conference in Baghdad. He cited Iraq's war against Islamic State as the reason Iraq should be grouped with Iran and Nigeria in being left out of cuts agreed to at a meeting in Algeria last month.

"We are with OPEC policy and OPEC unity," Al-Luaibi said. "But this should not be at our expense."

Saudi Arabia's minister of energy and industry Khalid Al-Falih is meeting Sunday in Riyadh with energy officials from Russia, Qatar, Kuwait, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates for oil talks while OPEC tries to establish which members will reduce production, and by how much. Iraq, the second-biggest OPEC producer, is pumping close to record levels, adding to a glut of crude that caused prices to tumble over the last two years.

"We have passed 4.7 million barrels a day," Falah Al-Amri, the head of the state oil marketing company known as SOMO, said at the same news conference. "We are not going back. It's a question of sovereignty."

OPEC adopted a Saudi-di-led policy in 2014 of allowing members to pump as much as they could to retain market share in the face of increased supply from outside the group. Prices have plunged to about half their 2014 levels, reaching a 12-year low in January as rising sales from OPEC added to new production in countries like the U.S. and Russia. Brent crude, the global benchmark, has climbed about 40 percent this year as OPEC discussed cuts. Prices closed Friday at $51.78 a barrel.

Iraq pumped 4.228 million barrels a day at fields under the control of the federal government in Baghdad, deputy oil minister Fayyad Al-Nima said at the news conference. Production at fields operated by the semi-autonomous Kurdish government in northern Iraq stood at 546,000 barrels daily last month, Al-Nima said. Total exports were 3.871 million barrels a day in September, Al-Amri said.

The Iraqi officials are briefing reporters on the country's production after oil minister al-Luaibi disputed the data OPEC uses to gauge output. The group agreed in Algeria last month to make cuts but left undecided the level from which it would have to trim output. Bloomberg
